NEW OWNERS HAVE BIG PLANS FOR BIRDS

There are plenty of reasons for team ownership – ranging from a desire to be involved in the community, to the need to satisfy a competitive urge.

Or perhaps it's simply for love of the sport.

And while it is for all those reasons that Chuck Westgard, Gary Nylund and Scott Bradley bought the Surrey Eagles in June, they also did it for another: for the chance to do something together. "Coming in, our expectations are high. Very, very high," said Nylund, who will also act as an assistant coach this season, alongside new head coach Matt Erhart.

Off the ice – which will be Westgard's focus while Nylund and Bradley concentrate on the hockey side of things – the group has all kinds of plans, from marketing and game-day experience ideas, to getting players out in the community, to eventually getting the team's dressing room renovated and expanded.

Nylund would like to see a blend of skill and toughness on future rosters. Playing an exciting brand of hockey will, in turn, help the team off the ice, Bradley added.

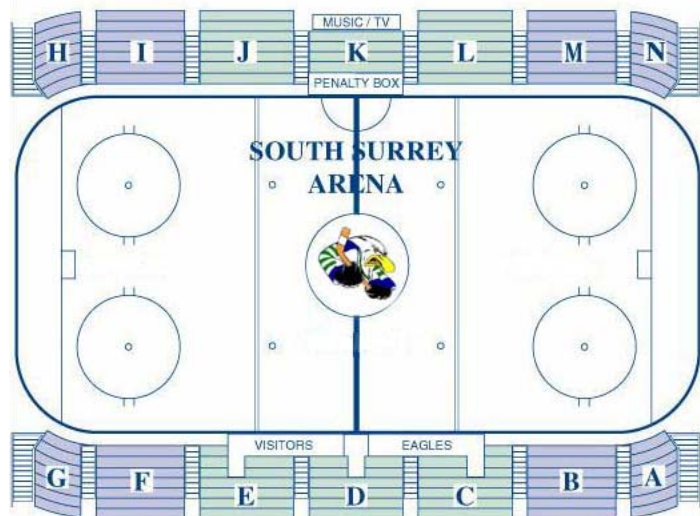

"If you put an exciting brand of hockey on the ice, I think the fans will come," he said. "I think you'll see a much fuller building, for sure. And if your players can walk away from junior hockey – whether they go to college or pro or wherever – and come away with a good experience, then we've been a success.

"I think in the past few years, some of the kids have maybe walked away from here with less than good feelings about how things went, and are a little bit sour. That shouldn't be the way it is – it should be the best time of their lives, and we're going to try and make it that way."
